Overview: Fall 2025

12 samples provided between September and October 2025

Samples were believed to be:

- Methamphetamine (7)
- Unknown (3)
- Fentanyl (1)
- THC (1)

What did we see?

7 samples have returned results

One sample was unknown but contained ketamine and cocaine.

One sample was expected to be fentanyl and contained only fentanyl and its related chemicals.

Of five samples expected to be methamphetamine (meth),

- All five samples showed only meth and its related chemicals

However, these samples varied in purity, ranging from 20% - 59%. This means all of the samples only contained meth, but purity of the samples varied.

In summary, samples expected to be meth and fentanyl contained only the expected drug!

What are we hearing?

Some community members recently have described responding to fentanyl overdoses where the person's symptoms and behavior was strange or alarming.

Unusual overdose experiences

We don't know exactly why this is happening, but we've observed an overdosing person is:

unconscious and not breathing but will briefly react, open their eyes, or gasp for air when moved or repositioned.

Strange Overdose Reactions

As discussed, some community members describe recently responding to fentanyl overdoses where the unconscious person will gasp, react, or briefly become awake when they are moved.

We don't know what is causing these reactions, but we suggest being prepared for unusual reactions. If this happens to you, please come in and talk to us about it.

The overdose may be longer or scarier, but the basics still work.
